THE STAGE-COACH TRAGEDY

A Thrilling Tale of Early Days in Colorado.

TOWNSEND'S LIFE AND DEATH.

Captain Cummings Reminiscences-A Double Life-A Youthful Emissary - Triumph of Judge Lynch.

Ten years ago the excitement of the day in Denver reached its climax when Captain Bill Cummings drove the Leadville coach out of the stableyard and pulled up in front of the United States hotel. In anticipation of the great daily event a crowd always began to gather an hour or two before the time set for the stage's departure. To pass the time pleasantly, the crowd, all of whom wore big slouch hats and carried pistols, speculated on the chances of the stage getting to its destination, and told wild stories of the last time Captain Bill had been "held up," and how much the express had lost when the highwaymen had broken open the box, after killing the messenger.

A short time ago, while in Denver, I was taken to the stable and shown the old stage. It is not much to look at The paint has worn off the sides, and the leather curtains, which used to be neatly rolled up, now hang down and mournfully flap in the wind. While I stood looking at the old stage and trying to imagine some of the scenes through which it had passed, the stable door opened and an old man entered. After I had seen the look of affection which he cast at the old stage, I was not surprised when my friend intro-duced him as Captain Bill Cummings, the famous driver. At first Cummings seemed disinclined to talk, and appeared to think that my questions were prompted solely by idle curiosity, but after a while he relented. He climbed up to his old place on the box, where he had passed through so many dangers, and after politely waving my friend and myself to a couple of empty barrels, which stood in one corner of the stable,

"Yes," he said, "this old stage has seen many a fight and been through lots of dangers, but the toughest time it ever had was in '76 and '77. In those days the hills between here and Leadville were infested by the worst gang of stage robbers that were ever known in this region. It was not that they were any worse than other gangs, but they were under the leadership of a man whose devilish cunning was such that it seemed impossible to corner him or even to find out exactly who he was. He tried it on once too often, however, and when his identity was made known after his death, it turned the whole city of Denver upside down for a week. There was at that time a business house on Larimer street, where all the miners went to get their supplies. The head of it was one of our most enterprising citizens, and was generally respected and looked up to. His name was Amos V. Townsend. It had been reported that some of the stage robbers had been heard to call their leader Amos, but no one ever dreamt of connecting the famous desperado and the respected merchant together. One night just before the stage was to leave Denver, I was taken aside by a friend and was told to take particular care, as one of my passengers was going to Lead-ville to purchase some mining properties and had a small fortune in his belt. The would-be mine owner was pointed out to me. He was a young fellow with a quiet, determined appearance, who seemed well able to take care of himself. Besides him there was only one other inside passenger, whom I took to be a tenderfoot, from his nervous man-ner and the absence of any weapons about him. The two express guards and myself were the only ones outside. As we were driving down Laramie street I happened to see Mr. Townsend standing near the stove, and I saw him nod to some one inside, but I took it to be a passing farewell to the young man who was going to buy the mines. I had not much to say to my passengers, and I took them to be about as unsociable a lot as I had ever carried. Each seemed to attend strictly to his own business, and it was only at long intervals that I

"On the evening of the second day we when we drove up to Banks' station, where we took supper and changed horses, I began to think that we would get through safely. Both passengers got out to eat, and I noticed that the manner of the young man I had ranked than it had been when we left Denver. and I sized him up as being unfit for the country into which he was going. We staied at the station about half an hour and then I saw my two passengers safely inside and climbed on the box. Just as I was gathering up the lines old Banks came out and told me he had seen a man drive by with a led horse just before dark and I had better be careful not to run over him. At this I saw my tender-foot stick his head out of the window but he quickly pulled it in again and I drove on. "Just as daylight was beginning to appear over the top of the high mountains I drove up to the last station be-fore reaching Leadville and dismounted from the box with a sigh of relief, as I felt that now all danger was over. But when I put my head into the stage door to arouse my passengers I drew it back with a yell of surprise and horror. In the dim light I could plainly see that there was only one man inside, and from his strange position I knew some thing was wrong. When I threw open the door I found the only occupant of the stage was the man who was going to buy the prines. He was stone dead and cold. His throat had been cut from ear to ear; There was no doubt that my tenderfoot was the murderer, and after killing his fellow traveler and securing his belt with the money, he ad crawled through the rear window of the stage and dropped off into the road. He had evidently taken the journey with the sole purpose of com-mitting the murder and taking the plun-der. When we carried the dead man into the station we found Captain Rawlins of the enver mounted police, and three of hen who were out hunting for despe. does. They immediately gave up all other business and started in pur-suit of the murderer. The result of the hunt I heard from the captain himself. Half way between the two stations he found by the roadside a place where a camp fire had been built and where two horses had evidently been tied to a tree. By the side of the fire was the mur-dered man's empty belt. For four days the captain and his three men followed the trail of the murderer and his companion through the mountains. At last one night, before dark, they came upon the desperadoes in a mountain gorge. Both men were seated on the ground. Cautiously the captain and his men crept up to the unconscious poration, to seek no further, whose wag-rufflans. Each officer brought ons must be six-horsed ones, and well his gun to bear on one of the men and I loaded at that.

then Captain Rawlins called upon them to surrender. Without an instant's hesitation each man grabbed his gun and fired on the officers. At the first discharge from the officers the man who had committed the murder fell and a moment later his companion lay stretched on the ground beside him. On examining them Captain Rawlins found that the younger man who had been in the stage, was not quite dead. Toward morning the young man re-vived sufficiently to talk. He refused to give his name and it was never known. He said, however, that Amos V. Townsend was the leader of the gang and had planned the murder and had commissioned him to execute it. On the other man papers were found which proved beyond question that Townsend was indeed the villain which the dying murderer said he was.

"Captain Rawlins waited until his prisoner died, and then hastened to Denver to arrest Townsend. He found the old murderer in his shop, and quickly put him under arrest." Here the old man stretched himself and slowly descended from his seat. "But," said I, "what became of Town-send?" Captain Bill walked to the stable door and threw it open. Said he: "Stranger, you see that tree down the street? Well, the night Townsend was arrested a lot of masked men took him out of jail without much trouble, and the next morning he was found hanging from that big limb there. He also had twenty-seven bullets in his body."

An Odd Kind of Millionaire.

London Daily Telegraph: A French millionaire cuts but a very indifferent figure in comparison with an English one. The Gallic variety has but the trifling sum of 1,000,000., or £40,000, placed to his account when his countrymen one and all accord him the title A real substantial millionaire from the English point of view has, however, been discovered in the person of M. Arnaud Oyarcabal, who has just re-turned from South America to his native town of St. Palais, in the Basque prov inces, where in his youth he helped his father to sell goats milk. From his own father to sell goats' milk. From his own countrymen's point of view the successful goatherd is thirty times a millionaire, for he possesses 30,000,000f., or £1,200,000 sterling. Fifty years ago Arnaud Oyarcabal went out to Buenos Ayres with his father. For a long time the two Basque peasants found the Argentine republic anything but an El Dorado, where, as in the imagination of rado, where, as in the imagination of many a poor emigrant, men pick up gold in the streets. They suffered so much hardship and misery that the older man died, and his son became a servant in the house of a wealthy landowner who lived in the outskirts of Buenos Ayres. The landowner had no family, and he was so thankful for the devoted attendance of his Basque servant that he made Oyarcabal his sole legatee. On the death of his master the ex-goat herd purchased several lots of land be tween the Paraguay and the Salado, and these they sold in a few years at ten times their original value. M. Oyarcabal's return to his native town of St Palais, has, of course made a great sensation in that rather primitive locality and he is the wonder of the day all over the department of the lower Pyrenees Far from dissipating his doubloons amid the distractions and temptations o Paris, where he might have a Renaissance villa in one of the Bois de Boulogne avenues, a stud of racers, a box at the opera, and be chronicled diurnally, like many of the millionaires from the new world, as the giver of Lucullus-like dinners and the cultivator of expensive exotics, he prefers to spend the evening of his days in the shadow of his native hills and to do good to the people among whom his early life was passed.

unique souvenir, given him by John Drew, the old actor. When Mr. Drew was manager of the Arch Street theater, was manager of the Arch street theater, Philadelphia, Mr. Bookhammer relates this interesting incident: "About forty years ago when I was a young man about Philadelphia I saved
Mr. Drew's life, One night myself and a few friends were out swimming off the 'Turtle Rocks,' in the Schuylkill, a short distance from the While we were there a party of city. gentlemen came out in a boat and also went in bathing. I was a frequent attendant at the Arch Street theater, and I at once recognized the party as Mr. Drew, Mr. Thayer, and other mem-bers of the stock company of that theater. After the gentlemen had been in the water a few minutes, one of them exclaimed: 'My God! where's Drew? He can't swim!' The moon was shining brightly and I saw air bubbles rising on the water not far from the rocks. With out stopping to ask any questions I dived to the bottom at that spot and came up with Mr. Drew. He was al-most gone but by extraordinary efforts his friends succeeded in resuscitating him. A few days after I received a note from Mr. Drew asking me to call and see him at his residence. My brother and I went around and were met at the door by Mrs. Drew, who showed us into her husband's room. He had not yet fully recovered. Mr. Drew received us very cordially, and expressed his gratitude in a very feeling manner. He proposed a money recompense for what I had done, but I declined. Going to a desk he wrote something on a piece of paper, and, handing it to me, said I could at least accept that. It was a pass for myself and my friends to the Arch street theatre as long as he or any of his friends should control it. I accepted it gladly, and, although it was given to me forty years ago, I still have it in my

How Much a Man Eats.

Richard A. Proctor in the October Cosmopolitan: It has been calculated that on the average, each man that atconsumes during the course of his life twenty wagon-loads of food, solid and liquid. At four tons to the wagon, this would correspond to an average of about a hundred ounces of food perday, or say some one hundred and twenty ounces per day during adult life, and about eighty ounces during infancy and youth. Most modern doctors agree in regarding one hundred and twenty ounces of food per day, corresponding to five or six half-pints of liquid food, and seven or eight pounds of solid food, as in excess of the real daily requirements of a healthy man or women.

Yet probably most of us take more than this, in one way or another, during the day. Dr. Lankester, from an extensive analysis of the dietary of soldiers, sailors, prisoners, and the better paid classes of artisans and professional men in London, found the average daily quantity of solid and liquid food to be one hundred and forty-three ounces. Doubtless many take much less; but unquestionably many take much more than this. When some one mentioned before Sydney Smith the twenty wagonloads of food calculated for each man's allowance, he turned to Lord Durham, who like himself was corpulent (and not without sufficient reason), with the quaint remark, "I think our wagons, Durham, must be four-horsed ones."
There are members of the London cor-

How a Young Californian Made His Sweetheart Wash Off the Rouge. San Francisco Chronicle: A grownup man, a man of mature years, would not have done it. He would have put his arm around her and said gently:

"Dear, I don't like your painting and powdering. It doesn't make you look And she would have told him that she thought she did, and of he didn't like it he could go and get another girl, or something like that. At the best she wouldn't have taken any notice of the remonstrance. But he was a young man, and that was not his way. He was going to take her to the theater. and, knowing her peculiarity, he put a powder puff and a box of rogue in his When she came down stairs He saw she was decorated as usual. He immediately pulled out his rogue and powder and painted himself up.

Cattle. The receipts of cattle were liberal for the close of the week. As compared with yesterday there was a heavy falling off, there being only seventy cars to-day and 138 on the day only seventy cars to-day and last on the day before. The market was only moderately ac-tive and the number of cattle that changed hands was not large. The main feature in the market was the sale of a very prime bunch of corn-fed natives at $5.00, being the top paid for cattle so far this season, as it was also the best bunch seen here. There were a few bunches of western and Texas cattle sold for feeders and also one bunch of natives. Only a few odds and ends of butchers' stock were sold. Values on all grades of cattle remain about the same. The shipments were unusually heavy, ninety-one loads being forwarded to Chicago.

Hogs. The receipts of hogs show a slight falling off, there being thirty-three ears of fresh receipts to-day and forty ears yesterday. In addition to the fresh receipts there were four-teen stale loads, making the total offerings forty-seven loads. The total offering on Friday's market were sixty loads. The market opened fairly active at prices a shade to 5c lower than yesterday. The hogs were all taken and the market closed steady with the opening.
